It is, indeed, plain enough, as our American authorities observe, that the quality of American statesmanship is alarmingly deteriorating; at no more reckless set of politicians ever existed than those at the head of the party now in power at Washington; that the Western States of the Union are putting forward a number of claims almost as mischievous in their way as those which the slave-owning States used to be constantly pressing before the war; but we fear that one thing is clearer than allthe incurable superficiality of the masses of the English race all over the world in matters which require the slightest strain of thought. It is no doubt true that a remarkable and very serious change has come over the political relations of the various parts of the American Union .

They see the farmers' associations of the Western States threatening to become a great political power, and they can think of no better expedient for buying their support than by bribing them with hundreds of millions of debased currency. The fact is that the party led by Senstor Morton and General Butler is demoralized by the consciousness that, if it falls at all, great indeed will be the fall of it. Its tenure of power depends on its retaining its enormous close borough composed of all the former slave States. The negro majorities which these States now give to the Republicans would in all probability fade rapidly away but for that military power at their back, at which it consists of really redeemable prom-stood this universe; each man may understand ises to pay. Many political phenomena of the what good and manful work it lies with him to modern democratic world have shown that blunders and injustices belong to no particular era or state of society; and here we have the Legislature of the United States repeating that particular fraud of feudal princes which even the middle ages had fallen into the lowest discredit. There is absolutely no difference in principle between adulterating the metallic coinage and "inflating" the paper circulation. The sole real distinction consists in the greater liability of the older piece of cheating to be found out. A medieval gold coin had its proper intrinsic value in the market, and the money-changer detected not by the scales or the tests, but by some slight labor of the brain. As a bank note is, to begin with, a piece of paper which is absolutely without appreciable value, a very superficial person may conclude that any number of pieces of valueless paper may be made valuable by printing on them the same words which appear on the face of a redeemable note. The difficulty, such as it is, of seeing through this fallacy gives the modern corrupter of money his sole advantage over his execrated prederessor, but both the act and its consequences are identical in these two cases. The image and superscription of the monarch lied in the older example; the consequences are identical in these two cases. The image and superscription of the monarch lied in the older example; the assertion that "the United States promise to pay" is a lying assertion in the modern instance. The consequences were also strictly parallel. The prince of the middle ages enabled himself, in the first place, to cheat his own creditors; the United States propose to cheat a good many of theirs by paying them their inspections. The prince of the middle ages and the propose to cheat a good many of theirs by paying them their inspections. Those vast States of the West which before long will contain the great majority of American citizens appear determined to grow wealthy, not through the natural exuberant fertility of their soil, but by the most violent experiments on economical and fascal principles. They are bent on compelling the rall-ways to convey their produce to the seaboard at arbitrarily low rates of carriage, and they are eager to force up the price which this produce commands in the market by flooding the country with artificial money. There is apparently neither virtue enough nor knowledge enough among the Republican leaders to protect them against the urgency of the West.

They see the farmers' associations of the West.

As a statesman he must rank very low, being simply a theorist; but his errors were those of a noble mind filled to overflowing with pity for the suffering and the oppressed. As a writer he stands in the foremost rank of French authors. His style is glowing and picturesque, his powers of description are marvelous, his powers of all her writers he has the most soul; as a story teller no one is more charming; his faults are a strong tendency, to the inflated and the exaggerated, to a morbid sentimentalism which too frequently sinks into a pathos and emasculation. He is, above all others, the poet of women.

Like all Frenchmen, intense egotism was a separation from his wife, and, necessarily, to a termination of public life.

The constituencies which existed before 1867 were very generally at the command of personal or individual guidance, and, like many popular bodies under similar circumstances, they were made to achieve great things. But we have the strongest doubt whether free trade could have been established under the representative system set up in 1867, and we suspect that on this point Mr. Disraeli would agree with us. Like all Frenchmen, intense egotism was one of the prominent errors of his character. CARLYLE'S ADVICE TO THE MAN WHO | This fault was redeemed, however, by so many DREAMS.

Apparently you are a young man of usual, perhaps of extreme sensibility, and placed, at present, in the unfortunate position of having nothing to do. Vague reverie, chaotic meditation, the fruitless effort to sound the unfathomable, is the natural result for you. Such a form of character indicates the probability of superior capabilities to work in this world; but it is also, unless guided toward work, the inevitable prophesy of much suffering, disappointment and failure in your course of life. But the mere interests of this or that party could never have produced such an amazing result if they had not the Densest Popular is not possible to construct or conceive arguments more conclusive than those which establish the mischievous folly of "inflating" a paper currency beyond the point at which it consists of really redeemable promulations.

derstand, always, that the end of man is an action, not a thought. Endeavor incessantly, with all the strength that is in you, to ascertain what—there where you are, there as you are—you can do in this world; and upon that bend your whole faculties, regarding all reverses they bear on that, and will help toward that. Your thoughts, moods, &c., will thus, in part, legitimate themselves and become fruitful possessions for you; in part fall away as they bear on that, and will help toward that. Your thoughts, moods, &c., will thus, in part, legitimate themselves and become fruitful possessions for you; in part fall away as they bear on that, and will nelp toward that. "Here are a thousand," answered Lamartine, giving him the money. Only the revenues of a prince could sustain such munificence. For years before his death he was overwhelmed with debts, and reduced to comparative indigence; but the divine impulse of charity remained as active as divine impulse of charity remained as active as ever. He was saving up to buy himself a little pony-chaise to take the air in; he had gathered just a thousand francs, when a poor woman who lived in the neighborhood came to him with a piteous tale; her goods had been seized by a hard-hearted creditor, and homeless destitution stared her in the face. "How much do you require?" he asked. "A thousand francs," was the answer.
